About me, I am forever grateful to be born into a loving family, where my parents had worked really hard to make ends meet. My parents brought me to the USA since I was a little kid in elementary school. My parents are immigrants from Vietnam, Asia. Just like many immigrants, my parents hope to find a better life for our whole family and a better future for their kids. I don't know what I would be doing if I am still living in Vietnam by now. Perhaps I would be kidnapped and sold into the human trafficking business because I can be gullible at times.

To me, success means that I have good health and can live comfortably at my own pace doing the things that I love to do instead of working too long hours or working under high stress all the time. For example, I want to be able to work on a project, then take a break before going on to work on another project instead of doing constant grinding all the time. A close family friend of mine around my age just passed away recently in Chicago. He owns a company in Chicago that makes a lot of money where everyone would think that's successful, but he just passed away from having a stroke.
